Facebook has been fined £500,000 by the Information Commissioner's Office in the wake of the Cambridge Analytica scandal, after allowing third party developers to access user information without sufficient consent.

The ICO announcement on Thursday upholds its initial decision in July. The fine, which represents a drop in the ocean for a company that brought in $40.7bn (£31.5bn) in global revenue in 2017, was the maximum available to the regulator under old data protection legislation.

The ICO found that the personal information of at least 1 million UK users
